In 2009-10 she was the highest paid driver in Southern California before she retired years later. She was mentioned in an article in the Orange County Register as part of a multi-part series by the newspaper examining how school employees are compensated. This achievement was accomplished through dedication, overtime and a love for the children she was responsible for. Much of the overtime was to provide transportation for school events such as fieldtrips and athletic events; hence, the overtime was mostly paid by outside groups, including PTAs and parent boosters, district officials said.”
